3 UNO Students Fall Victim to Violence

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Violence has shattered the dreams of three UNO students forever.

Henry "Hank" Thompson, 20, was an Eagle Scout, a musician and an avid chess player. On Dec. 6, he was in the wrong place at the wrong time.

As Thompson was driving home, authorities allege that five reputed gang members forced entry into his minivan intending to use the vehicle for retaliation for a fellow gang member's murder.

Thompson was shot once in the head, and his body was found on 13th and Jefferson Streets.

The five gang members have been charged with using a firearm to commit a felony.

Sunday night, one month later, roughly 200 people attended a benefit concert in Thompson's honor.

Proceeds for the seven-hour, seven-band concert at the Saddle Creek Bar will go to Thompson's family and his Boy Scout Troop, his mother Debbie Howard said.

Howard said she would like to have another benefit like this in the future and give the proceeds to groups in the area to "help get kids off the streets."

Henry "Hank" Thompson, 20, who studied mathematics at UNO for two years, was the victim of Omaha's first fatal carjacking. Thompson's body was found at 13th and Jefferson Streets early Dec. 6. He died of a gunshot wound to the head.

It is believed that Thompson's murder is related to the slaying of an alleged gang member, Michael Campbell. Thompson's van was seized to be used for retaliation for Campbell's murder.

James T. Burnett, 21, who attended UNO last semester, and a teenage Minnesota girl were found shot to death Jan. 3 in an unlocked car at Ames Avenue and 61st Street.

Burnett and the girl were supposed to attend an Orange Bowl party Jan. 1, but never arrived.

No one has been arrested in conjunction with the homicides.

Laura Gogan, 19, a UNO freshman, was found dead Dec. 13 at her apartment in southwest Omaha. Gogan allegedly was sexually assaulted and died of asphyxiation.

She was an active member of the Student Programming Organization at UNO.

Jeremy Osborn, who lived in the same apartment complex, has been charged with first-degree murder and the use of a knife to commit a felony. A hearing for Osborn is scheduled for Tuesday.

In the Name of Peace

Debbie Howard, mother of Henry "Hank" Thompson, stands by a collage of pictures of her son who was the victim of a fatal carjacking in December. Thompson attended UNO for two years.

Howard was attending a benefit concert in her son's honor Sunday at the Saddle Creek Bar. Proceeds from the concert, titled "A Need for Peace," will go to the family and Thompson's Boy Scout troop. Seven bands performed for seven hours.

Bauer to Leave Post

After 15 years as vice chancellor of academic affairs, Otto Bauer will leave his post June 30 to take a periodic professional leave.

Bauer, who also is dean of Graduate Studies and Research, will use his leave to prepare to teach as a tenured communications professor.

Bauer served 20 years as a chief academic affairs officer. He served as vice chancellor at the University of Wisconsin-Parkside for five years prior to his work at UNO.

He also served as special assistant to the Chancellor at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

A search committee for Bauer's replacement will be named soon.

'Safe Return' to Aid Alzheimer's Patients

BY JODI BOOKE

Imagine being in an unfamiliar place, surrounded by strange faces, not knowing how or when you got there.

This experience, known as "wandering," is a frightening reality for many victims of Alzheimer's Disease. Patients sometimes leave their own homes and then forget how to get back or even where they came from.

"Studies report wandering in 4 to 26 percent of nursing home residents with Alzheimer's Disease who suffer from dementia," said Jane Potter, chief of geriatrics and gerontology at the University of Nebraska Medical Center. "Falls are more prevalent among those who wander."

However, thanks to an offering from the Alzheimer's Association, wanderers are just a phone call away from home.

"Safe Return" provides a nationwide database of information about Alzheimer's patients. People enrolled in the program are provided with a bracelet, a necklace, clothing labels and wallet cards. These items indicate that the patient is memory impaired and contains an identification number and a toll-free number.

UNO Gallery Set for 1994

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The UNO Art Gallery will open its 1994 season with three new exhibits.

"A Salt of Life" by Richard Hungerford, consists of handmade paper, relief prints and a mixed media focusing on responses to electronic media.

A group of eight women known as "Seattle X 8" is exhibiting a collaboration of paintings on tin called "100 True Stories Please and Thank you." The exhibition portrays women's daily and emotional lives.

UNO art student Lonnie Potter's "Laborintus: domus daedali" will explore how labyrinths relate to the paths people choose in life.

The exhibits will run from Jan. 14 through Feb. 4 in the Art Gallery located in the Fine Arts Building.

The gallery is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. and 1 p.m. until 4 p.m. on Saturdays. For more information, call 554-2796.

Flight Team Gets Plane

By SUSAN McELIGOTT

Christmas came unexpectedly early for UNO flight team members who received the gift of a Cessna model 150 training airplane in mid-December.

"It's overwhelmingly wonderful," said Brent Bowen, director of UNO's Aviation Institute.

"The students are thrilled to have this new airplane," Bowen said. "It's a great asset to our program."

The plane was donated by the University of Nebraska Foundation.

Bowen described the Cessna as a two-seat airplane with flight controls at both positions.

"It's used primarily for teaching people how to fly and for upgrading the skills of people who are already pilots," he said.

The plane will be used primarily to support the student competitive flight team.

The UNO flight team is made up of 10 selected students, Bowen said. The team travels to other universities to compete in aviation events such as cross-country navigation, precision landing, flight planning and message dropping.

The team has competed for the last two years.

"They've done very well," Bowen said. "Having an airplane to practice with year-round will make them much more competitive and bring us more national recognition."

Until now, the flight team rented aircraft from a flight contractor to practice. Since students can use the Cessna at a lower cost than renting, they can afford more practice time, Bowen said.

Bowen said the aviation department has no plans to stop renting aircraft from flight contractors. He said the department is very pleased with its contract service arrangements.

"We're not intending to acquire a fleet of airplanes to replace the need for contract services because the service works so well. We don't have long-term goals to acquire new aircraft unless a specific need arises."

The Cessna is kept at the Aviation Institute Flight Operations Center at Eppley Airfield.

"It's quite an enhancement," Bowen said. "Private donors provided the money for the airplane, and we appreciate the support from the community."

UNO Grad Student Makes Discovery

By KATHARINE STOLTZFUS

In his thesis, UNO graduate student Michael McCandless set out to find the truth behind the censorship of a 1936 play and uncovered a significant piece of theatrical history along the way.

While researching the controversial cancellation of the play "Ethiopia," McCandless, a student in the College of Fine Arts, discovered the production's original scene designs as well as designs from several other plays of the same period.

According to McCandless, "Ethiopia" was the first of a series of "living newspaper" plays funded by the Franklin Roosevelt administration under the Federal Theater Project. The plays were designed to be dramatic representations of current events and the characters in "Ethiopia" included Mussolini and several leaders of countries belonging to the League of Nations.

"Ethiopia" was cancelled by an administrative official who said that foreign rulers could not be depicted on stage in a federally-funded project, McCandless said. The official reason for halting the production given by the government was a fear of damaging diplomatic relations.

McCandless believes the government's real motivations were somewhat different.

"There was a lot of Democratic objection to having this type of entertainment. A lot of politicking was going on," he said.

Among other things, McCandless said the Democrats were afraid the play contained Communist elements and would reflect badly on President Roosevelt.

An added dimension was added to McCandless' thesis when he discovered Hjalmar Hermanson, the scene designer for "Ethiopia."

McCandless said he was surprised to find that anyone working on the 1936 production was still alive.

At the invitation of Hermanson's daughter, Lynn Hermanson-Blum, McCandless flew to Portland, Ore., to meet with Hermanson, now 86 and living in a retirement home.

Upon his arrival, McCandless was told that after 57 years of storage, the original scene designs for "Ethiopia" and several other Federal Theater productions had been found.

Although Hermanson now suffers from dementia, McCandless said he was "excited and thrilled" that the designs had been found.

"His comment to me was 'it was a hell of a lot of work for nothing,'" McCandless said.

"It was a neat experience that made the circle complete because I was able to touch part of the production that I'd spent so much time with."

The scene designs have now been sent to George Mason University in Fairfax, Va., where the Library of Congress houses its archives for the Federal Theater Project.

McCandless said he was pleased to be a part of the preservation of Hermanson's work.

"On a small scale you can consider it kind of an archeological find. I had the opportunity to present something of American culture. It's thrilling to be a part of that."

McCandless feels that the Federal Theater Project era is an often overlooked "renaissance period in American theater."

McCandless, who also teaches at Creighton University, is awaiting his diploma. He plans to continue his research on the Federal Theater Project and to participate in George Mason University's annual "Theater of the First Amendment" in April.

"I'm kind of on a mission," McCandless said.

apartment in southwest Omaha on Dec. 13 when she allegedly was stabbed in the neck after a sexual assault or an attempted sexual assault. She died of asphyxiation.

Jeremy Osborn, 19, who lived in the same apartment complex as Gogan, has been charged with first-degree murder and the use of a knife to commit a felony in connection with the murder.

James Burnett, 21, attended UNO last semester and had dreams of owning his own business someday, his friends said.

Burnett's body was found along with that of a 19-year-old Minnesota girl, Terri Hall, Jan. 3.

Burnett and Hall had been shot to death and left inside a car Burnett had borrowed.

No arrests have been made in connection with the case.

Resolutions Are Not the Answer

As I sat parked in front of a friend's house on New Year's Eve, I thought about what I was doing. Aside from waiting for my friend's father to come outside in his kilt to play his bagpipes — nothing.

At the stroke of midnight there was no sign of good ol' Angus Bell, his kilt or bagpipes (he didn't show this year). At this time, I looked at my faithful sidekick and did something I try to avoid.

I made a resolution.

What exactly did I resolve? Well, nothing yet. But I swore that we would have companions for the next New Year's fiasco. Be it only for that night or a lasting commitment, I would not be alone on the next New Year's Eve.

It has been 11 days since that night and the only person to offer aid in this struggle is a high school junior. Naturally, I politely declined. I have a few morals left. Anyway, that would have been illegal.

With this thought festering in my mind, I've concluded that New Year's resolutions are a crock.

I swear that I'll lose weight.

I'll stop biting my nails.

I'll call my mother more often.

Lies. All of them. Lies.

The thought is nice, but really do you want to chit chat with your mother? She's probably the reason you moved out to begin with.

No shooting stars have brought forth the man of my dreams yet. So what exactly are a few words spoken in a Ford Festiva going to do for me?

Probably nothing.

To make these resolutions is a feeble effort at self-discipline. I should know, I'm often quite feeble, and I lack a great deal of self-discipline.

No change in effort is easily accepted, and it rarely does any good to force change on an unwilling party.

Resolutions are simply a realization of answers to problems. They are not indicative of any proceeding action. They do not guarantee that the evil within will be exorcised.

New Year's resolutions are a farce. They almost always set you up for failure. Often they set you back further than you had thought of being.

I've gone back on a thousand of them and every year a make another one. The only one I ever fulfilled was when I was fourth grade.

I swore that I would get a 2+ (B+) in handwriting. I just had to slow down, work my butt off and hope that I got that good effort grade.

If you are not ready to change your lifestyle, do not force yourself. No matter what anyone says to you; things change naturally. When you are ready to give up a major vice; you will.

All you really need is some type of motivator. And it's not pressuring yourself.

All that does is give you another opportunity to feel like a failure.

Nothing sets you back as far as being disappointed in yourself.

Please don't misunderstand what I'm saying to you. I'm not saying that one day you'll wake up and never pick up another "Ho-Ho." You do need to motivate yourself to initiate major tasks and things will be difficult. However, if done at the right time in your life, it will be natural and — unlike every other time — it will feel right.

It's really quite simple.

You know what you are capable of. Everybody does. Whether they work to that level or not, is up to them.

You do not need a special time of year to rid your life of its major faults. It takes more than a holiday to change your life. You need a little determination and a lot of luck.

Perhaps a miracle would be helpful for this manhunt, though. I'd hate to waste another tranquilizer dart.

Time to Take Action

In an effort to reduce the violence prevalent in some black communities around the country, several black leaders from different walks of life held a conference in Washington D.C., last week to develop a policy to combat the violence.

What they came up with was a 10-point plan they hope can begin to bring peace to neighborhoods which now resemble war zones.

However, like any other controversial topic, there are those who opposed the meeting.

It is considered, by some, taboo for blacks to publicly acknowledge some of the problems going on in their communities. The fear is that doing so will simply confirm negative stereotypes of blacks.

Forget about keeping negative stereotypes alive, how about keeping young black males alive?

The number one cause of death among young black males is homicide. The number one demographic killing them is young black males. The unity among some black males isn't based on the color of their skin, but rather the color of their caps.

This must change.

It's time for prominent black leaders and role models to speak out strongly against the violence permeating their communities. They need to follow the example of Jesse Jackson and not only talk tough, but take necessary steps to bring about change.

Jackson is the one who put last week's conference together.

More focus needs to be placed on positive role models for blacks. Colin Powell, Bill Cosby, Michael Jordan, Oprah Winfrey and Maya Angelou are just a few nationally known black role models.

One does not need to look far from home to find positive black role models, for instance, Calvin Jones, Eddie Staton, Robert Armstrong, Brenda Council and even Ernie Chambers.

Sure, some of Chamber's actions may be controversial, but he will never be one to sell out those who voted him into office.

What the black community doesn't need anymore of is the recent rage in gangsta rappers.

The music speaks of death and destruction. If only these hard-core rappers realized what damage they're doing to their own race. If only they cared more about their listeners than they do their money.

How did these gangsta rappers become the role models anyway?

There is one lesson positive black role models could learn from the gangsta rappers. It's how to talk tough.

Tell it the way it is, right the wrongs and don't worry about what others may think of it. If it reinforces the stereotypes of some ignorant bigots than so be it. There's probably little that can be done to change the minds of the unenlightened. However, the respect gained by the open minded could bring help from varied sources.

Jackson and his group have taken the difficult first steps in reducing the violence facing blacks today. Jackson has challenged churches, schools, parents and President Clinton to take necessary steps to curb the violence.

Now it's up those challenged to either make an effort to reduce the violence in the black communities or continue to blame each other for the problem.

Jackson's challenge should also extend to everyone, regardless of race. Violence isn't just limited to blacks, it's a problem we all have to deal with everyday of our lives. The recent murders of three UNO students should have brought the fear of violence even closer to the heart.

Jackson and other black leaders have set the example. It's time to talk tough, and take the necessary steps for change.

Now, who wants to lead the way?

Friends and family of an Alzheimer's patient can call the toll-free number if they get separated from the patient or if the patient wanders off.

The call notifies a computer network of 17,000 law enforcement agencies and police officers are sent out in search of the patient.

When someone finds the patient, they can call the toll-free number on the bracelet or necklace. After contacting the database, arrangements are made for the patient's "safe return" to his or her loved ones.

The only charge for "Safe Return" is a $25 initiation fee.

Potter offered ways to "treat" or prevent the wandering behavior that occurs due to memory loss in some Alzheimer's patients. She suggests:

- Planning activities that keep a person with Alzheimer's involved.

- Make exercise part of the daily routine to help satisfy the need to move about. Sharing an exercise, like walking, is also good for socialization.

- Put fences around your patio or yard and place locks on gates. Gates on stairwells are also an option.

- Consider electronic buzzers, infrared eye alarms and chimes on your doors.

- Use nightlights, signs and familiar objects to help guide the person around in a safe area.

- Frequently reassure the patient, who may feel lost or abandoned.

Some researchers believe wandering may be a search for someone or something, while others believe it is a way to deal with feelings of loneliness. Potter said boredom and restlessness are other reasons behind the activity.

Potter's prevention tips are not a guarantee that wandering will not occur. She sees "Safe Return" as a much-needed insurance policy.

For more information about "Safe Return," call the Omaha Chapter of the Alzheimer's Association at 572-3010.

William Burke, director of geriatric psychiatry at the Med Center, is researching ways to treat the memory loss associated with Alzheimer's Disease.

Burke said two months ago the Food and Drug Administration approved the drug, Cognex.

Cognex is the first drug approved by the FDA for the treatment of memory loss in Alzheimer's.

"We already have fairly good treatments for some symptoms of the disease, like depression, hallucinations, and paranoia," Burke said. "We are just beginning to look for ways to treat the memory loss."

According to Burke, "Most people who use Cognex don't see a dramatic improvement. Only 10 percent of them even show a moderate improvement."

For the minority that the Cognex does help, it can increase memory and socialization.

Burke said he's heard patients say it's the equivalent of turning the clock back six months.

However, Cognex does have side effects.

According to Burke, about one-third of patients taking it have some inflammation of the liver, nausea and rashes.

Burke's research team at the Med Center is currently studying two drugs that he hopes will be at least as effective as Cognex, but without the side effects. He said they are in the initial stages of the study and that it will probably be a year before they see any results.

"We're treating the disease, not reversing it," Burke emphasized.

Mavs Dominate Meet

Fifteen UNO wrestlers placed among the top four in the Maverick Open on Saturday in the UNO Fieldhouse. The tournament attracted 11 teams and 130 participants.

By DAVE BORYCA

Brian Zanders and Pat Kelley each registered three pins to lead a group of seven UNO wrestlers to individual championships Saturday in the Maverick Open in the UNO Fieldhouse.

"The meet went really smooth," UNO Coach Mike Denney said of the Mav's showing. "Anytime you win seven titles, you know that you've wrestled well."

In all, 15 Mavericks placed among the top four in the tournament that attracted 11 teams and 130 participants.

Zanders, a junior from Des Moines, decided on University of Nebraska at Kearney's Jason Christianson, 8-5 for the 150-pound title. Zanders also won the award for the most falls in the least amount of time, recording three pins in 8:20.

Kelley, a redshirt freshman from Cody, Wyo., decided on Steve Fischer of Teikyo Westmar, 5-1, for the 190-pound title. Kelley's three pins in the tournament came in 10:38.

Other Mavs who won championships were Lim Prim, 118-pounds; Jimmie Foster, 126-pounds; Steve Costanzo, 134-pounds; Eric Robinson 177-pounds and Darin Tietz, heavyweight.

"Everybody wrestled well," Denney said. "We got in a lot of matches, and that's why we hold the tournament. We need to develop and prepare our wrestlers. The best way to do that is through a lot of matches in a tournament designed for individuals."

The Mavericks are idle until Friday night when they host North Central Conference rival St. Cloud State. Denney said he's confident that the team will do well.

"I feel we're prepared," he said. "We don't have any easy opponents, but we're at the level we need to be on."

Mavs Get New Football Coach

STAFF REPORTS

The position of UNO head football coach has been filled.

The job now belongs to Pat Behrns, a native of David City, Neb.

Behrns earned his bachelor's degree at Dakota State College in 1972. In 1980 he became North Dakota's head coach and compiled a 36-26 record after six seasons. He then moved to Utah State, where he was the offensive backfield coach from 1986-88. He was Utah State's offensive coordinator from 1989-91 before becoming the offensive coordinator at Nevada-Las Vegas from 1992-93.

According to Behrns, the UNO team has potential.

"UNO could be the premiere football in the league, (North Central Conference)" he said. "There are many things going for it and there is some good high school football around there."

Behrns replaces Tom Mueller who resigned after four seasons as UNO's head football coach. In that time, Mueller's teams went 2-9, 6-4, 2-9 and 2-9 for a 12-31 overall record.

UNO Stretches Skid to 4

By DAVE BORYCA

A tricky zone defense and a heavy-handed offense allowed Northern Colorado to dispose of the Mavericks Saturday night, stretching UNO's to losing streak to four games.

Northern Colorado was led by five players with double figures as they pulled away with a 91-74 win by scoring on eight of 12 free-throws in the final two minutes.

"They have a much better team than their record suggests," Coach Bob Hanson said of now 5-6 Bears. "We had a tough time adjusting to their defense, which hurt us the entire game."

Peter Ledford led the Mavs with six field goals, five of them 3-pointers, and two free throws for a total of 19 points.

Ledford's performance helped

UNO attain a total of 10 threes, breaking the previous record of nine set last year against North Dakota.

"(Ledford) couldn't get into it that well during the first half," Hanson said. "He tried hard the second half, though, and did a great job of shooting the ball."

Despite the loss, Hanson said the Mavs did a good job of challenging the Bears.

"We jumped into the lead early, and until towards the end of the game, we were never behind by more than seven," Hanson said. "And they played one freshman while we played six. We're trying to win games and working to win."

The Mavericks drop to 2-9 overall, with an 0-3 record in the North Central Conference.

UNO travels north for its next two games. The Mavs play Friday at North Dakota State, and Saturday at North Dakota.
